

Ahmed Ibrahim Abushouk is a Professor of Modern and Contemporary History with special focus on the Middle East and Southeast Asia, Qatar University. Received his PhD in History from Bergen University, Norway, in 1998. Before joining Qatar University in 2012, he worked at Bergen University (1998-1999) and International Islamic University Malaysia (1999-2012). During this period, he has set up a wide network with various academic institutes, including the International Institute for Asian Studies, University of Leiden, the Netherlands (Holland); the Institute of Theology, University of Lund, Sweden; the Centre for Modern Oriental Studies, Berlin-Germany; University of Pittsburgh (USA), St. Norbert College, and University of Wisconsin (Green-Bay).

Administratively, he held the headship of the Department of History and Civilization, International Islamic University Malaysia (2004-2007), and the Deputy Deanship for Research and Postgraduates, the College of Islamic Revealed Knowledge and Human Sciences (2007-2010), Directorship of International Institute of Muslim Unity, and the Coordination of History Programme, Department of Humanities, Qatar University (2013-2015, 2016-Present). The areas of his interest are Islam and Arabs in Southeast Asia, Islamic revivalism, and British colonial rule in the Middle East and Sub-Saharan Africa. His latest publications include: The Hadrami Diaspora in Southeast Asian: Identity Maintenance or Assimilation? (With Hassan Ahmed Ibrahim), Leiden: R.J. Brill, 2009; The National Elections in the Sudan, 2010: Analytical Study (Doha: AlJazeera Centre for Studies, 2012), King Abdul Aziz in al-Manar Magazine, Beirut: Arab Scientific Publishers Inc., 1914; Interdisciplinarity in History: An Old Method in New World Context (edited with Mahjoob Zweiri) Cambridge: Cambridge Scholars Publishers, 2016.